

My University Life in two Countries

RIVAS IGLESIAS Tharik

Tokyo

For Mexican international students, the most demanded destinies are Europe or Latin America; fewer students go to Asia due, among other reasons, the difference in the way of living. So, when I got notice that I got selected to study at HOSEI University, my first option, I was as excited as I could be but, at the same time, anxious about what my university life would be like.

All my worries were alleviated as soon as I met my HOSEI buddy, with whom I was able to form a strong friendship and also helped me to get familiar with the campus. Also, the capability I have to communicate in Japanese has also helped me make new Japanese friends and develop further my student life by being able to form part of music circles. All of this while working hard on my classes.

Guadalajara

Guadalajara is my hometown and where I attend university at the University of Guadalajara. My campus, I have to say, is still under construction, so I'm amidst a restructuration of the student community on a new location. So, as of now, there's no circles or inviting extracurricular activities to do after the classes are over. That, I would say, is the main difference. In HOSEI, I really like spending time on campus talking and studying with other students. While, at my home university, aside from talking with my friends, there's not much to do after class.
